A MODEL HUSBAND.

Question "Is a Husband Worth Having?" Answered-Two Kinds of Men. For the Intelligencer.

The interrogatory above is a question that more than one woman has asked, not only herself but others. And the majority that I have heard answer it have emphatically said "no."

Now, it is not my intention to give none sided view of the question, but I will try to present it in the light that I re-gard it, and see if a husband is really worth having. I will take into consideration his good and bad qualities, and at the same time make due allowance for the imperfection of human nature; for I believe it would be impossible to find all the ex-cellent qualities combined in one single man, and neither is it to be supposed that any one is entirely devoid of some few of these qualities.

So then the question "Is a husband worth having?" will depend in every worth having?" will depend in every case on what kind of a husband you have. Is he good or bac? Does he possess these virtues, and how does he perform the duties of life?

Now, if he is sober and industrious, provides shelter, food and such clothing as his means will recent; is it is in the content of the

as his means will permit; isn't jealous and quarrelsome about trifles, but is kind and thoughtful of the feelings and comfort of others; don't think he has the wisdom of Solomon and knows everything, and his wife knows nothing, but will give het credit for having as much good sense as he has, if not more.
Takes a sensible view of the trouble that comes, and patiently bears it, without blaming his wife as being that out blaming his wife as being the direct cause of itall; won't find fault with every meal that is cooked, but is willing to make due allowance for scorched steak, muddy coffee, and bread that is not as light and wholesome as it should be.

Never refuses to answer civil questions, won't take a sulky or snappy spell if everything doesn't work just to please him, won't whip and scold the children, only at such times as is necessary to correct them for their own good and the good of others. And when he has spare time on hand, don't think it beneath his manly dignity to help his wife with her house work, when she has more on hand than she can reasonably do. .... Thinks more of attending to his business than he does of pleasure; and won't neglect his family to go on a pleasure jaunt; nor spend his money foolishly, but tries to lay by something for a rainy day.

Won't get mad and scold if he is asked to mind the baby while his wife sets up supper; won't let his wife sup-port the family while he is well and able to do so.

able to do so.

Wants his family to enjoy the pleasures that he does; would rather spend his spare time and evenings at home than to lounge around saloons; hates evil doings, and does right as far as he has understanding; by word and deed sets a good example for his children, and helps his wife teach and instruct them so they may grow up to be useful them so they may grow up to be useful men and women.

Now, if he does anything like this, why then a husbane is certainly worth having, and anyone possessing such a husband is doubly blessed and ought to be a very happy women if she isn't, and faithfully perform all her wifely duties and not let her husband's heart and affections warder from her fee he he isn't, and in the state of the state fections wander from her, for she has a jewel of a husband, if she only knows it. On the other hand, if he is reckless and dissipated; doesn't care very much whether he provices for the wants of his family or not; would rather spend what little he earns at the saloons, and what little he earns at the saloons, and leave his wife to not-only care for the children, but support them also; isn't kind or civil to his family only hy spells, but is very pleasant and agreeable to outsiders.

Gets up in the morning feeling as if he would like to quarrel with somebody; begins with finding fault with the breakfast, and then leaves the house in a raging passion; returns in the evening in the same frame of mind and under the influence of liquor; and the evening in the same frame of mind-and under the influence of liquor; and if he finds the baby sick, and things at six's and soven's, and supper not ready, vents his spite out on his wife and blames her as being the main cause of their not getting along any better in the world. the world.

Sets a bad example for the children
by cursing at the table instead of asking a blessing; and then after the meal is over either tumbles into bed or else seeks the saloons or some pleasure re-sort so he will be rid of the trouble at home.

Whips and scolds the children more Whips and scolds the children more when he home.

Whips and scolds the children more than there is any reason for; when he gets sick highly insulted if he thinks he is slighted in the least way; wants everybody to wait on him, but when they are sick won't perform any of these duties for them, only at such times as he can't well help himself; becaudges his family any innocent amusement or a pleasure jaunt, but he likes to enjoy all such privileges himself.

Isn't satisfied with his home and surroundings, and won't half try to make things any better; promises much but does little.

Now if there are any husbands life this, why, I am of the same opinion of these who say a husband is not worth having, and I pity any woman who is bound for life to such a careless husband. I hope and trust there are not many who are; for the only thing they can do is to perform all their duties the best they can, and with the aid of Divine Grace patiently bear their cross in life.

Figures on Tin Plate.

Figures on Tin Plate. The American Manufacturer this week gives some interesting figures on the tin plate industry since the passage of the McKinley act. Reports show a re-duction of 40 per cent, in the importation of tin plates into the United States for the months of January and February, 1892, as compared with the same months of '89-'90-'91. A portion of this difference is due to the circumstance of excessive importations the last six months of 1891, though the total imports for each of the years 1890 and 1891, and not equal the shipments to this compared to the terms of t try w. 4850. Another reason advanced to explain the exhibit is that a great deal of home made untinned has taken the place of imported tin and terne plates. t being painted and substituted for terne plate for roofing. Glass jars have been substituted also for tin cans. The increased duty has not affected prices to any marked extent, and the properts are that there will be a decline. English prices have dropped since January 1, 1891, from 17s 6d to 12s 6d, the prices quoted April 1, 1892. Liverpool prices per box have dropped in fifteen months 1.21c, nearly the amount of the increased tariff.

PRESIDENT HARRISON.

The Chief Executive's High Character-At Estimate by a Religious Journal. United Presbyterian.

The nation is honored in its President. At no time during his term has the trial of his personal qualities and his fitness for the high position been more severe than at the present; when politicians are laying their schemes and working are laying their schemes and working their plans for the coming conventions to nominate his successor, but he bears the test. He has shown himself a man of positive political convictions; he has had a policy, and he has followed it fairly and firmly. Whether we approve the policy, or not, we know what it is, and that it is followed, not for partisan advantage, but because of the conviction that it is right and wise. In our foreign relations some delicate and our foreign relations some delicate and difficult questions have arisen, but in every case the honor of the nation has been maintained, and the rights of its citizens defended in a satisfactory man-ner. The government is not to be held responsible for correspondents and politicians, but for its own actions. Judged thus, we must accord to President Harrison a clearness of vision, a soundness of judgment and a firmness of purpose, as well as prudence in the exercise of it, that honor the nation of which he is the head.

We could wish that in some cases more aggressive measures had been taken, but we recognize the existing complications, and wait for the results of the slower processes. Although the ideal in civil service has not been attained progress has been padde the tained, progress has been made: the whole machinery of the government has not been used for partisan and personal ends. At the present time he conducts himself with the dignity and self-respect which command the honor of all. While others are manufacturing public sentiment in favor of candidates, he is quietly performing the duties of his office, allowing the nomination for the next President to take care of itself. It very much commends the President to us that he has not pleased the politicians. He has not submitted to the dictation, and hence many of them are seeking and hence many of them are seeking some one else to be his successor.

But above all we honor the President for his high personal character, and for the pure administration he has given us. There are no scandals to be covered up by skillful correspondence, there is nothing that will remain as in the least degree disponency to the high research degree dishonoring to the high moral tone that should pervade the national administration. A well-balanced man, he is a President to be esteemed and lines, one for whom we should be thankful as representing the best elements in our national life.

Corn, onts, pork and lard and ribs all suffered. A lareak of nearly 2 cents in wheat occurred and the closing to-night, compared with twenty-four hours previous, shows a net loss of about 13/c cents. The public cables came in steady to higher, but the private advices received were quite the opposite, nearly all of them quoting depression and weakness, while domestic markets were also inclined to sell lower. Trade was dull and the business very narrow, being chiefly confined to the professional talent and room traders. To many the storny weather did not appear, specially unfavorable. There was no great amount of news of any kind; such as there was generally favored the bears side of the market. The weather was not especially unfavorable in the winter wheat country, nor was there much apprehension as to its effect on the spring question in the northwest.
